Statement of Work

Work Plan

The Social and Economic Sciences Research Center (SESRC) at Washington University will provide economic, demographic, educational and industry information that can be used to inform planning by the Seattle Community College District (SCCD), as well as both Seattle Central Community College and South Seattle Community College (colleges).

SESRC will

- Analyze and describe current economic conditions and forecasts for Washington, focusing on King County and the subregions of each community college in the SCCD system,
 - related to current and future job demand, including
 - emerging technologies
 - potential growth occupations
 - and the job skills/education they require, and
 - related to economic specialties of other Seattle Metropolitan area colleges and universities
- With assistance from SCCD, provide a demographic portrait of Seattle area students today and the demographics of the population in the region
- Describe the intersection of these conditions with features of a comprehensive community college in the 21st century:
 - relationship to baccalaureate institutions in King County and, as appropriate, statewide
 - relationship to secondary schools in King County
 - relationship of SCCD programs to career ladders of potential industry specialties
 - Working with SCCD and colleges' assistance, provide analysis of current (and recent) college courses/programs as they relate to the economic conditions and forecasts
- Assist the SCCD and its colleges to draw conclusions for program planning purposes from the data

Responsibilities:

SESRC is responsible to:

Phase 1: Conduct Economic and Demographic Scans:

- Prepare sub-area analysis of Washington/King County/Seattle economic data
- Provide summary of current and emerging demand occupations for Washington/King County/Seattle with particular attention to subregions of each SCCD college
- Analyze issues of skill development relevant to current and projected demand occupations
- Working with SCCD staff, prepare description of current and potential students, including age, potential language and cultural barriers, transportation issues, e-learning, and other factors critical to student success.
- Describe the significance of these characteristics to the economic conditions of Seattle and surrounding areas as they relate to potential program development.
- Present research: brief written research summary and PowerPoint slides Present research: research summary and PowerPoint slides.

Phase 2: Conduct Partnership Scan:

- Analyze partnership opportunities for potential new/expanded programs, based on economic scan
 - Analyze potential development of secondary partnerships.
 - Analyze potential development of industry partnerships.
 - Analyze potential program development within context of other colleges and universities in the Washington/King County/Seattle area
 - Present research: brief written research summary and PowerPoint slides Present research: research summary and PowerPoint slides

Phase 3: Conduct Best/Promising Practices Scan

- Conduct literature search on relevant best/emerging practices features of comprehensive community colleges in 21st century
- Working with SCCD/colleges, prepare tool for SCCD self-analysis
- Present research: research summary and PowerPoint slides

Phase 4: Provide Final Report

- Provide report customization, to include:
 - conclusions to combined reports, created in collaboration with SCCD and each college

- tailor self-analysis tool to reflect specific SCCD/college planning
- Present written summative report, delivered electronically, prepared for printing

SCCD is responsible for the following:

- Reviewing and approving, in a timely manner, the reports and enquiries generated in each phase of the project.
- Helping to identify sources of information, particularly regarding current and previous education and industry partners.
- Helping to coordinate work with SCCD and college staff, as needed.
- Identifying locations and times for meetings to present materials from each phase.
- Printing reports, as desired
